Eight tips for going on an extended business trip

by Rosie Murray-West, January 2017

Adapted from: <http://www.telegraph.co.uk/connect/small-business/business-travel/7-tips-extended-business-trip/>

From being mentally prepared to maintaining your physical health, here are seven tips for making long-term business travel as enjoyable as possible.

1. _____ "Bring something from home that helps you feel like you," says Lisa Crocker, general manager at Staybridge Suites in Newcastle. She says many residents bring family photos, children's drawings or other personal items to have around them.
2. _____ "Successful long-term business travel is about getting the mindset right first," says John Wagner, of Cycas Hospitality, which manages Staybridge Suites in London, Liverpool and Manchester. "You need to be mentally prepared to treat the place you are staying in as a residence. "This includes thinking about how you will cook and eat, as well as hobbies you might be able to continue while you are on your trip. "We have people who bring their golf clubs or other sports equipment," Mr Wagner says. "People should prepare themselves to live like they do at home."
3. _____ "When you are not at home, try to ensure you keep in touch, as well as finding people to interact with in the local area. With complimentary WiFi, offered at all Staybridge Suites, you will not even have to pay to keep in touch. "There are so many apps these days, it's harder to be unreachable. Use FaceTime, Facebook Messenger, Skype, What's App – when connected to WiFi they are all free," says David Chapple, of the Business Travel Show.
4. _____ "Meeting people near where you are staying can be harder, but websites such as Meetup can help you to connect with like-minded souls, or even do courses on unrelated subjects such as crafts (9) or cookery in the evening. All Staybridge Suites hold regular evening social events, which can also allow people to interact with their neighbours. "We even had a couple who met here and got married," said Ms Crocker.
5. _____ "If you are always making trips home to see the family during a long-term sojourn (10), mix it up and invite them over instead. "We get quite a few families in our apartments," Ms Crocker says. "People can be quite proud to show the family where they are staying, and it can be helpful for everyone." One-bedroom Staybridge Suites come with a pull-out bed in the living room, as well as a separate bedroom, so the family can join you and really relax.
6. _____ "Even if you are staying in a serviced apartment with a fully equipped kitchen, there may be particular things that you use but are not commonly provided. Giovanni Valentini, who manages Staybridge Suites London -Vauxhall, says that long-term residents sometimes bring in items that allow them to cook the food they prefer – for example, rice cookers or

7. _____ ““Most road warriors have an exercise routine that they stick to wherever they are,” says Mr Wagner. “This can help them to get through long-term travel.” A hotel or apartment with a gym is a good way to ensure you stay healthy on the road. Jacob Morgan, author of the Employee Experience Advantage and frequent business traveller, says: “I deliver around 40 keynotes a year all over the world, and one of the things I always look for in a hotel is a gym. If that's simply not possible then I always make time to do a morning workout either in the room or somewhere outside.”

8. _____ “Finding out about the local area, from the best supermarkets and restaurants to the most suitable places to walk, will help you feel at home. “Everyone who comes to us gets a welcome pack with lots of local places explained, and vouchers as well,” says Mr Valentini. Other places to gain local knowledge include Facebook groups, local message boards and the staff where you are staying. You will be living like a local in no time.

A. Get your family over
B. Prepare your mind
C. Become more sociable
D. Prepare your business trip carefully
E. Be sentimental
F. Make the most of local knowledge
G. Keep your health routine
H. Check the weather report
I. Combat loneliness

How This Teenager Turned Her Childhood Hobby Into a Global Business

Adapted from: <https://www.entrepreneur.com/article/246000>

When Bella Weems was 14 years old, she wanted a car - despite the fact it would be two years 0 she could legally drive it. Many 1 her friends were older, and they were passing 2 driving tests. Moreover, a friend had let Bella drive a very old white, stick-shift truck on some land the family had. When she told her parents, they told her she 3 have to pay for it herself. Bella turned to babysitting but after months of caring for kids, she only had $350 4 show for her efforts. At that rate, she thought, she'd never save up enough money 5 time. Again, she expressed herself to her parents, noting 6 frustrations of labor-intensive work for low pay. Rather 7 suggest a second job or offer money in exchange for completing chores or maintaining a particular GPA, her mom and dad offered to match the money she saved from babysitting so she could start a business.

She went looking online for ideas and settled on jewelry -- specifically, customizable lockets - - for a simple reason. "It's something I found fun and interesting," she says, explaining she and her mother would go to a bead store on the weekends, long 8 they ever thought of turning a profit from accessories. Picking a name for the business was done in a similar fashion. When her mom asked her to think of what sort of things she liked, Bella thought of owls. Good, her mom said, what 9? Origami was another thing Bella enjoyed, so they put the two words together and Origami Owl was born. The women liked that it sounded 10 whimsical and wise. Bella says the same is true of the partners' business dynamic: "I'm the whimsical side; [My mother] is the wise side," she says.

To get the ball rolling, Bella held "parties" at her house _ 11 _ friends and family could come and purchase separate chains (between $12 and $22), lockets (between $14 and $46) and charms ($5 _ 12 _) that they could put together to create pieces that told their individual stories. Bella, _ 13 _ instance, wears a locket that holds a cameo charm in honor of her grandmother, along with a sunflower charm and a cupcake charm because she loves these two things.

After positive feedback from the partygoers -- who doubled as advertisers by wearing the lockets around -- mother and daughter team set _ 14 _ shop in a mall kiosk in November 2011. They sold _ 15 _ estimated $60,000 a month during the holiday season, but more importantly, customers sent them around the country as gifts. Soon the Weems _ 16 _ fielding calls from different states from people looking to buy more. "They thought we were this big company already, not just two people in a mall kiosk," Bella says. It was time to launch a website.
